Karma

This page explains the relationship between voting Comments and the Karma system.

If enabled by the admin, you may be able to vote comments from 1 (poor) to 5 (very cool) in the title bar for each comment. When a user votes a comment, the Tiki karma system for comments is applied. The karma system works according to these rules:

- Each registered user has an associated number of points, which are the average of the user points and the number of votes. The result gives a user a certain karma level, ranging from 0 to 5.
- Users gain points when a comment they posted is voted. For example, when someone votes a user comment with 3, the user gains 3 points and earns one vote.
- When a user votes a comment, the number of points added to the comment depends on the karma level of the user; if the user has a high karma level, the comment receives more points. For example, a vote of 5 for a comment may add 4.22 points if the user has a very high karma, but only 0.23 if the user has a lower karma level.

This system makes users who post good comments gain more karma, and so their votes will make those comments rank higher.

NOTE: The current Karma system has a conceptual problem: if user A has a karma of 1, user B has a karma of 5, and A gives a rating of 5 to B, B will be given a rating of 1 (due to A's karma) and so B will have their karma lowered. This happens because a user's vote weight and his points are the same field. Itagundes

Related pages:
- Score
- Score vs Karma